

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF VENEZUELA

BY A MAN NOW ON THE GROUND

Venezuela has an area of 593,943 square miles. The republic is, therefore, the fifth in size and alphabetically the last in the role of the South American republics. Yet, historically speaking, Venezuela is actually the first of the countries of the new world to have been called to the attention of the old. Columbus discovered the islands of the West Indies, he called Cuba, Jamaica and San Domingo, but he had no true conception of the immense continent before him. Nevertheless, he saw the continent outlined on the shores of Venezuela, and if history is obscure on that point, tradition at least indicates that he actually set foot on the mainland within the borders of this country. In one of his later voyages, Columbus passed close to the island of Trinidad, he named the passage we today know as the Dragon's mouth, between that island and the opposite coast, and in all probability he touched the shores of Venezuela in this neighborhood. If only for the purpose of taking water.

Cumana, west of Columbus' landing place, is at all events, the oldest continued settlement in the western world. Here the saintly Las Casas founded a colony whose hope it was to become a permanent home in this new horizon. He lived here for years inculcating the pleasant reward of healthful work as contrasted with the feverish restlessness of those who harried the Indians and chased the phantom of an El Dorado and Cumana has ever since that date been inhabited and alive.

Those Spaniards who were led by the native fable of the "Gilded man" passed farther along the shores of the Caribbean and finally made settlements in the beautiful valleys between the mountains. They were accompanied by some precious minerals, but not much in comparison to those who adventured farther south in the Pacific. Instead of gold and silver, which had drawn them hither, they found a land rich in possibilities, willing to produce from the soil whatever man's industry asked.

Venezuela, in spite of the very earliest hopes and explorations, is essentially an agricultural and pastoral country. It may be divided into three divisions; the agricultural, the pastoral and the forest. In the first are grown sugar cane, coffee, cocoa, cereals, cotton, together with the other products of the tropical and sub-tropical zones; the actual tropical area in Venezuela does not occupy so much of the coast region relatively speaking, as it does in several other countries of Latin America; hence the mountains come close to the sea, leaving in places only a narrow fringe for sugar cane, bananas, cacao and such plant development as characterize this zone; from Cumana to Puerto Cabello, the ascent appears to begin immediately from the water, but further east and west, toward the Orinoco river and toward Maracaibo lake, this coast fringe widens into greater spaces. The sub-tropical area occupies practically the heart of the nation and embraces all the rich and varied land in the valleys and on the mountain sides where has settled the more numerous population of the country; here one finds a climate and a beauty of nature unsurpassed if not actually unequalled in all the world. The mountains may not be so imposing or solemn as in Peru in Ecuador and Colombia; they are greener, less rugged, more accessible; the valleys are wells of verdure and full of reward for the husbandman who will give energy and patience to the tilling of them; here cotton grows wild, coffee has been a staple product for over 100 years, all the grains and nearly all the fruits of the temperate zone can be cultivated and the markets of the world are so close that crops can be placed on shipboard within a day after being harvested. Further south of these well inhabited valleys are untitled and unimproved plains fitted for herding and breeding of cattle; it is no false prophecy to state that some day this little used pasture land of Venezuela will be able to feed much of the population adjacent to the Caribbean sea and the Gulf of Mexico. The forest area may be described as occupying the slopes eastward and southward, which drain into the Orinoco. There are immense possibilities in the exploitation of the natural forests of the Orinoco delta, as few regions so accessible to commercial routes have greater wealth of timber lands. Rubber can be made quite as profitable here as along the Amazon, and fortunately for the future rubber industry, as far as Venezuela is concerned, what few concessions have been granted covering the Rio Negro and El Caura sections, especially stipulate against wilful destruction of the forest trees.

Venezuela is by no means idle in industrial progress, although the republic suffers, as do many other of the Latin countries, from lack of workmen to till her fields. Her great staples are coffee, rubber and hides, but other crops will come with better times. Too much reliance has been placed upon coffee, which at one period of the country's history ground and even retained great values to those engaged in its cultivation.

The last recorded year coffee exports amounted to $3,992,832 pounds valued at $7,693,276, of which the United States took nearly $4,000,000, or 50.6 per cent. In total value, was exported to the extent of $5,308,960 pounds, worth $2,864,700, and of balsam rubber 3,441,476 pounds worth $1,190,860 left the country. France, which appreciates Venemela cacao highly, took half of the exported amount. In total values of exports, the United States received the larger share, about $2,500,000 of merchandise, followed by France, Great Britain, Cuba, Germany and Spain. Of the imports, worth $10,335,817, the United States furnished $2,626,471 or 25.5 per cent of the whole; Great Britain furnished $3,927,410; Germany $2,049,230, Holland, France and Spain the greater part of the remainder. The foreign commerce of the republic amounted to $26,540,905.

The revenues and expenditures of the Venezuelan government in 1906 were each approximately $10,000,000, being somewhat less than in the preceding year. The livestock of the country is estimated at 3,004,257 head of cattle, 176,688 sheep, 1,667,000 goats, about 500,000 of horses, mules and asses. The mines are undoubtedly rich and have been profitable to their owners, but many of the deposits remain unopened through lack of capital and labor. Gold, silver copper and iron are found in abundance, while coal has been produced to the extent of 14,000 tons in one year. When better transportation is afforded to the interior of the country a much greater export and even local trade is sure to be established. At present the railroad systems of the republic extend over about 550 miles, connecting chiefly the valleys behind the mountains with the coast cities.

A word of praise must be given Venezuela for the educational progress made within the past few years. In this republic education is a function of the national government, and has been organized on modern lines to meet the growing demands and needs of the people. With this university in Caracas as the cornerstone of the system, there is a well planned graduation of public schools; primary instruction is now free and accessible to practically every child and quite recently a course of manual training has been offered in which the mechanical arts are combined with the purely intellectual teaching.

Better Than Spanking.

Spanking does not cure children of bedwetting. There is a constitutional cause for this trouble. Mrs. M. Summers, Box W, Notre Dame, Ind., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment with full instructions. Send no money, but write her today if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child, the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night.

MAP SHOWING THE STATES AFFECTED BY THE BULGARIAN REVOLUTION AND THE NEW "CAZAR" OF BULGARIA, ALSO THE HOUSE OF NATIONAL ASSEMBLY AT SOFIA, THE HEADQUARTERS OF THE REVOLT.

Sofia, Bulgaria, Nov. 13.—Long live the czar of Bulgaria! Such is the popular cry for the self-crowned king. His latest action in that unsettled section of the world, the Balkan states, has created a furor over Europe and will undoubtedly terminate in a bloody war, which may change the face of the map in this district.

Just as the reform government in Turkey was establishing itself this new war cloud appears and Austria Hungary taking advantage of the imminent crisis has announced the practical annexation of provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Either of these acts is sufficient to cause the greatest apprehension and those staple powers of Europe who have been assisting Turkey in her reform have come out openly opposed to any change at this period. Either action is equivalent to the tearing up of the treaty of Berlin while Prince Ferdinand's course seems almost certain to precipitate a war between Bulgaria and Turkey. It is a well known fact that for some time Prince Ferdinand has been mobilizing Bulgarian troops near the border and to have been buying up munitions and horses on an extensive scale. The Bulgarians have great faith in their army which has reached a high state of efficiency while the Turkish army has been degenerating under the old regime. Prince Ferdinand declares for the independence of Bulgaria which will include Rumelia and will make an entirely new power in the world if he is successful in his attempts.

The principality of Bulgaria was nominally under the suzerainty of the Ottoman empire to which it paid annual tribute. It is the strongest of the Balkan states. It is about the size of Kentucky and has a population of 3,730,000 people. It is a rich country, in which agriculture and cattle-raising are the chief industries. The vast forests on the slopes of the Balkan mountains yield fine timber and the Balkans themselves include vast deposits of iron, salt and building stone. Coal is found along with gold, silver and copper. Bulgaria was colonized by the Bulgars, a tribe of Slavians, in the sixth century. For a time in the ninth and tenth centuries and again in the twelfth century it was dominant over a great part of the Balkan peninsula. The country was, however, unable to withstand the Turks, and became part of the Ottoman empire in 1366.

It was not until after the middle of the nineteenth century that the Bulgarians began their struggle for national independence. Russia's influence is now dominant. In 1878, following the defeat of Turkey by Russia, Bulgaria comprising the land between the Danube and the Balkan mountains was constituted by the treaty of Berlin an autonomous and tributary principality under the suzerainty of Turkey, with a Christian government and national militia. Eastern Rumelia, now known as Southern Bulgaria, was constituted at the same time an autonomous province of Turkey, but as the result of a successful revolution in 1885 its union with Bulgaria was proclaimed. The ruling prince of Bulgaria has, up to the present, been chosen by the national assembly elected for the purpose. Military service is obligatory from the age of 20 to the age of 45.

"A GOOD FELLOW." "A Good Fellow" is a phrase that we hear almost daily. It is applied to both sexes. We term a man as being "A Good Fellow" because he possesses a jovial disposition, is liberal, and is a past master at entertaining. He knows how to make friends and has a facility of holding them. He has the distinction of having people seek his society after once being introduced.

"A Good Fellow" as applied to the weaker sex is materially the same. In speaking of a woman as being "A Good Fellow" denotes that she is willing to sacrifice her own pleasures and comforts for the entertainment and enjoyment of others.

"A Good Fellow" which is the title of a new comedy written by Mark E. Swan, depicts this character most vividly. It tells of a story of a "chic" little girl, disguising herself in male attire for the purpose of visiting the man whom she has secretly married, and whose companionship has been denied her, the consequences of which bring about many funny complications. Feminine wit and the cunning which are brought into play accomplish the end desired. "A Good Fellow" will be the attraction at the Grand on next Wednesday night at which time the patrons of our local theatre will have an opportunity of enjoying a good laugh.

THE NIGHTINGALE.

Bright, exhilarating, sparkling, hilarious, "The Nightingale," which will be seen at the Grand Opera House in all its gorgeous splendor, presented by one of the most capable companies that has ever appeared in a musical comedy in this country, headed by the inimitable comedian, James H. Bonnell, one of the most notable laugh producers of the present day, is a production that should certainly appeal to every theatregoer as it is the most complete and refined presentation ever given. The organization has appeared in nearly all the larger cities and the present season is retaining the same favorable standing with the press and public as during the past five years since this elaborate revival was first given. The production is complete in every detail with a blending of tuneful music, lively choruses, novel dances, attractive marches and up-to-date specialty features. The chorus and principals have been selected with the greatest care and nothing has been left undone on the part of the manager to give such a performance as will merit the approval of the most critical and exacting. "The Nightingale" is full of surprises, laughter reigns supreme throughout the performance and the many changes, brilliant electrical effects, beautiful and elaborate costumes, with the novel tricks and illusions and high class vaudeville features, holds the audience in continual wonderment from the rise to the fall of the curtain. Seats should be secured in advance as the prices the present season have been placed within the reach of all classes.
